National Watch Day

Quick! take a look at your wrist. Are you wearing a watch? If so, you're not alone. More than markers of time, watches are fashionable and professional, and with the introduction of smartwatches, these timepieces can make calls and send messages! Since June 19th is National Watch Day, it's only fitting that we examine some famous watches from the movies. In "Dr. No," the first of many James Bond films, Sean Connery sports a Rolex Submariner 6538, a fitting watch for an international spy.

If you like the newer James Bond actor, Daniel Craig, you'll note he wears Omega watches, like the Seamaster Planet Ocean 600M he wears in the movie "Skyfall". Which watch is your favorite?

Today in History

In 1865, Union General Gordon Granger announced slaves were free in Texas. This date is now celebrated annually across the United States as Juneteenth, which is a federal holiday. Early celebrations date back to 1866, but they became more commercialized in the 1920s and 1930s.

DID YOU KNOW?

Eleanor the Columnist

Eleanor Roosevelt wrote a nationally syndicated newspaper column called "My Day" from 1935 until she died in 1962. It appeared in 90 different U.S. newspapers, where she advocated for various causes. Despite some newspapers dropping her column after she advocated for a particular candidate, she continued to write six columns a week until the last couple of years of her life, when she cut it down to three due to declining health.
