Air Conditioning Appreciation Day

A round of applause for the air conditioner, everybody! Aside from cooling the room we're in, air conditioners also cool our cars and help filter allergens from the air. Centuries before the invention of the air conditioner as we know it, civilizations had to get creative with ways to cool down. The Persians used "qanats" (underground irrigation systems) to keep cool, and the Romans used aqueducts. The ancient Egyptians incorporated windcatchers into their architecture to ventilate their buildings. During the Chinese Han Dynasty, Ding Huan invented a seven-wheeled rotary fan. Today, we can thank Willis Haviland Carrier for inventing the air conditioner in 1902. Originally, the air conditioner was intended for industrial use, but it eventually made its way into residential spaces. Isn't that cool?

Today in History

DID YOU KNOW? Half of Their Legs are The Feet

Flamingos bend their legs at the ankle, not the knee. Its knee is actually inside its body, where we don't normally see it. Scientists believe flamingos stand on one leg to avoid muscular fatigue. It's an energy-saving technique. Flamingos are more stable for long periods on one leg than they are on two.
