Uncommon Instrument Awareness Day

We've all heard of the piano, violin, and guitar, but have you ever heard of a theremin? What about a hydraulophone? Or the djembe? No? For Uncommon Instrument Awareness Day, let's learn about these strange noisemakers. Known for its ethereal and extraterrestrial sound, a theremin is an instrument that is played without touching it, and it's one of the oldest electric instruments in the world. A hydraulophone, one of the most rare instruments, creates sound through the vibrations of running water. And the djembe is a goblet drum from West Africa that's played with the bare hands. When it comes to more mainstream instruments, the tuba, French horn, and bassoon are the least commonly played instruments. What's the strangest instrument that you've ever heard of?

DID YOU KNOW? Cute to Look at, But Not Much Upstairs!

Koalas have small and smooth brains, lacking higher-level recognition. They may not recognize eucalyptus leaves as food and have no understanding of rain. They spend more than 20 hours a day sleeping due to their inefficient diet. Their small brains may be an evolutionary adaptation, requiring less energy.
