Fun Fact	When Arctic wolves hunt as a pack, one adult member remains behind as a puppy sitter.

The Arctic Wolf, also known as the White Wolf or the Polar Wolf, lives in the frozen landscape of the Arctic. They specifically can be found in the Canadian Arctic, parts of Alaska, and along the northern coast of Greenland. Because of the extreme climate of their habitat, Arctic Wolves can withstand average winter temperatures of 22-degrees below zero as well as several months with no sunlight.

The Arctic Wolf is a subspecies of the Grey Wolf, albeit with distinctive differences in their appearance and behavior from other Grey Wolves. With their thick white coats, furry paws, and extra layer of body fat, the Arctic Wolf can easily survive – both insulated and camouflaged – in its almost permanently snow-covered habitat. They also have smaller ears and shorter noses than other Grey Wolves which enables them to lose less body heat and survive long Arctic winters.

Arctic Wolves live far from human populations and are rarely seen. Those who have seen them notice how playful and unafraid of humans they are, seemingly having no distrust of us!
