National Tartan Day

This day is named after the woolen fabric known as tartan, which is a traditional Scottish fabric consisting of squares and crisscrossing lines, and is commonly seen in kilts. This day commemorates the signing of the Scottish Declaration of Independence in 1320, which is significant because the American Declaration of Independence was modeled after it. It is worth noting that many of the Founding Fathers of the United States were of Scottish descent. In fact, almost half of the signers of the Declaration of Independence and nine of the 13 governors of the newly formed United States were Scottish. Tartan Day was first celebrated in Canada in the mid-1980s and was later adopted by Scottish Americans in the United States in 1998. To celebrate you can attend a parade, wear a kilt and sporran, or cook and enjoy a traditional Scottish dish.

Today in History

In 1906, the world's first animated cartoon was released. It was created by British American film producer J. Stuart Blackton, and it was called "Humorous Phases of Funny Faces". Blackton was one of the pioneers of motion pictures and was considered a father of American Animation.

GIFs: Quick Reactions!

GIF, which stands for Graphics Interchange Format, was created by American computer scientist, Steve Wilhite, in 1987. It consists of a series of images combined to form a soundless short video graphic. GIFs, smaller in file size than videos, are easily shareable via text, email, and social media. Originally designed to compress images for slow dial-up internet connections, GIFs are now primarily used to convey hyperbolic reactions in online communications.
