We Love Memoirs Day

Throughout history, memoirs have been written by various individuals, from scholars and politicians to ordinary people. Originally documented in scrolls, journals, and letters, they later took the form of oral literature.

In the 20th century, memoirs by ordinary men and women became more common. Today, memoirs are written by individuals from various walks of life, including career politicians, businesspeople, military officers, and celebrities.

Is there a public person you admire? Have you read their memoir? Everyone has a life story; today, we get to tell that story and read about the lives of others. We can appreciate things others have been through and gain an appreciation for our place and how far we have come.

Today in History

In 1985, thoroughbred horse racing jockey, Ángel Cordero Jr., became the 3rd in his sport to ride horses earning over $100 million. In 1988, he became the first Puerto Rican to be selected for the United States' Racing Hall of Fame and won 7,057 races during his 35-year riding career.

DID YOU KNOW?

Canaries of the Sea

Beluga whales, often referred to as the canaries of the sea, are known for their beautiful and expressive vocalizations. They are among the most vocal of all cetaceans, with sounds that can be heard above water and through boat hulls. Remarkably, belugas are one of only two cetacean species capable of altering their facial expressions, allowing them to showcase playful "funny faces" as they produce various sounds.
