Greenpeace Day

Make a pact to help the environment on Greenpeace Day, September 15th. This day highlights activism in the name of the environment. The day recognizes peaceful protest for change to improve air quality, and reduce reliance on fossil fuels, use of plastics, and water quality. Conservation and preservation fall under the topics of environmental justice. The organization, Greenpeace, was founded on September 15th, 1971, when 17 activists hoped to stop the nuclear testing taking place off the shores of Alaska. Although they were unsuccessful in their mission, this protest set a movement that is still growing today. Greenpeace still holds peaceful protests for change. Today marks a day to perhaps get a group together to pick up trash, engage in cleanup, or discuss ways to help our environment.

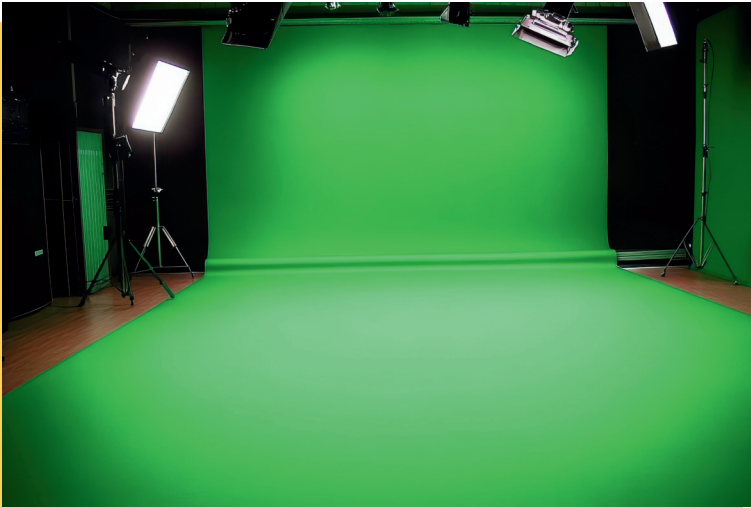

Today in History

In 1968, "A Happening in Central Park", with Barbara Streisand, premiered on CBS TV. She is one of the few people to have won an EGOT: An Emmy, Grammy, Oscar, and Tony Award. A devoted philanthropist, she founded the Barbara Streisand Women's Heart Center at Cedars-Sinai.

DID YOU KNOW?
Green Screen Tech

While often associated with modern blockbusters, early forms of compositing using colored backdrops date back to the 1940s, as seen in films like "The Thief of Bagdad." This technique, where actors perform in front of a solid color that is digitally replaced with another image or environment, revolutionized filmmaking. Today, green screens aren't just for movies; they're used in weather forecasts, virtual conferences, and even live streaming, allowing for endless creative possibilities.
