Calendar Adjustment Day

As we mark our calendars, it makes sense that there is a day devoted to just that! Calendar Adjustment Day is much more than a simple reminder. Following the British Calendar Act of 1751, Britain adopted the Gregorian Calendar in 1752. However, the then-current Julian calendar system required them to drop eleven days to sync with the proposed Gregorian Calendar. Thus, on the evening of September 2nd, 1752, the population of Britain and its American colonies went to sleep and awoke the next morning to September 14th, 1752.

The changeover was also responsible for New Year's Day being celebrated on January 1st, as before then, it had been celebrated on March 26th.

Today in History

In 1960, American sprinter Wilma Rudolph won the 100-meter gold medal at the Rome Olympics. It was her 1st of 3 gold medals in a single Olympic Games. Rudolph had polio as a child but excelled in high school sports. After retiring, she used her platform to champion civil rights.

DID YOU KNOW?
Baseball Stitches

Ever wondered why baseballs have red stitches? In the 1800s, baseballs were handmade, often by pitchers like Albert Spalding, who later became the official supplier for the National League. Initially, each league had different stitch colors—red and blue for the American League, red and black for the National League. In 1934, both leagues agreed on a uniform design: a white ball with red stitches, improving visibility for batters and enhancing gameplay.
