National World Poetry Day

One of the most powerful art forms there is, poetry can touch many different people on many different levels. In honor of this wonderful expression, UNESCO declared World Poetry Day at its 30th meeting in Paris in 1999 as a way to "support linguistic diversity through poetic expression and increasing the opportunity for endangered languages to be heard." With such great poets as Emily Dickinson, Robert Frost, and Maya Angelou, there have been poems written about any and all subjects including war, peace, poverty, dreams, fear, you name it. There are dozens of types of poems and they all can elicit a wide range of emotions.

What's your favorite poem?
How does it make you feel? Enjoy it and others on World Poetry Day.
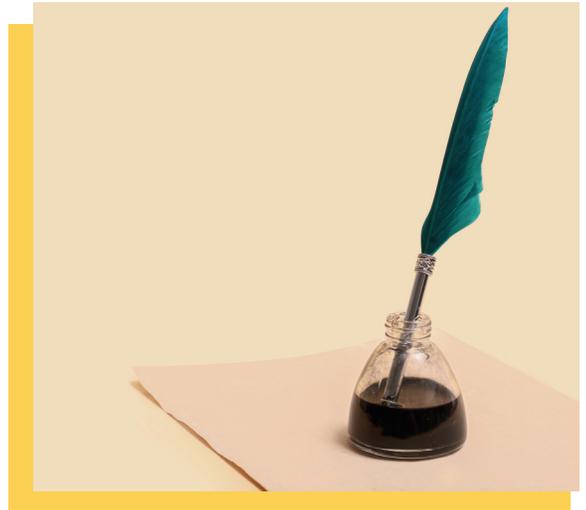

Today in History

In 1970, The Beatles' "Let It Be" entered the Billboard chart at the highest debuting position ever for a record, number 6. The sales for the single were huge, with millions of copies already flooding record stores. The album had not been released yet.

DID YOU KNOW?
Andersen's Anxious Alarms

Though famous for his fairy tales, Hans Christian Andersen lived in constant fear. He carried a rope in his luggage to escape potential fires and avoided pork and dogs entirely. His greatest terror was being buried alive; every night, he left a note by his bed stating, "I only appear to be dead." These peculiar phobias shadowed the man who brought "The Little Mermaid" to life.
