International Skeptics Day

If you're a "Doubting Thomas," well, today is your day because it's International Skeptics Day...or is it!? Just like Thomas the Apostle refused to believe that Jesus rose from the dead without actually touching His wounds, you, too, can choose to be skeptical about whatever you'd like today. Is the sky blue? Is the Earth round? Is Elvis dead? International Skeptics Day is the day to hold tight to those things you don't quite believe.

What makes this day even more skeptical is the fact that it is observed on different days throughout the year: today, election day, and every Friday the 13th. If you love skeptics, we encourage you to celebrate all three days.

Today in History

In 1950, "All About Eve," starring Bette Davis, premiered. The film won Best Picture at the Academy Awards in 1951. One of Hollywood's great actresses during its golden age, Davis was the first actor or actress to be nominated ten times, winning twice for "Dangerous" and "Jezebel".

DID YOU KNOW?

For The Love of a Bird

Nikola Tesla was known for his contributions to the AC electrical current system and his peculiar love for pigeons. He formed a special bond with New York City's pigeon population, even claiming to have fallen in love with a white pigeon. The 2020 biopic about him unfortunately omitted these details, choosing instead to include a fictitious scene with his rival Thomas Edison.
