DID YOU KNOW?

Nature's Secret Recyclers

Did you know that breaking down bioplastics isn't a superpower unique to microscopic bacteria? Scientists recently discovered that dozens of animal species, from marine invertebrates to insects, naturally possess enzymes capable of digesting polyhydroxyalkanoates (PHAs), a common type of bio-based plastic. Researchers long believed this ability was strictly limited to microorganisms, so uncovering that complex animal species independently evolved these plastic-munching enzymes opens up exciting new possibilities for biological waste recycling and environmental cleanup.
